

Dancing his way to glory

From learning the nuances of dancing, choreographing Tamil movies to performing at different shows and acting in television channels in the UK & USA, his first directorial and acting debut fetched him the rightful place in the world of entertainment. We are talking about Rahul Nath, the multi-talented actor-cum-director of the much talked about movie 'Foreign'.

Performing arts being his first choice, the UK born Indian's passion was fuelled by his love for dance and the urge to learn about other people.

Speaking about his first film Foreign he ecstatically shared that it received excellent reviews and also won him Best Actor award in a lead role at the South Asian Film Festival held in Goa and Best Director and Best Film at the American International Film Festival in Michigan USA. His second venture 'Compromise' is scheduled to release in May. Being an NRI, the plots of both his movies throws light on the life of the NRIs.

Presently working on a documentary on transgender people living in Mumbai, Rahul aspires to make documentaries on the untouched sections of Indian society. "Indians are not the way people abroad perceive them to be. I want to change the way the world thinks about India and Indians through my documentaries and movies," said the enthusiastic director.

He informed that he has two more movies in the pipeline titled Glamour and Indian Traffic, both of which have excellent subjects that will appeal to the masses.
